Welcome from the SAF Executive Director

It is with great pleasure that I welcome you to this edition of “Giving Voice.” This community report allows the Sonora Area Foundation to share information on our activities and financial condition, while taking time to celebrate how individuals and organizations continue to make a difference in our community.

I know that the Board of Directors of the Foundation is especially pleased by the grant making that has been made through the Foundation into the community over the past year. Whether it’s supporting youth sports at the Sonora Dome Field Restoration Project, performing arts at the Sierra Repertory Theatre or senior meals through the Meals on Wheels Program, the Sonora Area Foundation’s competitive grants have assisted numerous non-profit organization projects and programs.

The results are always astounding. Just one year ago, our newsletter reported about commencement of construction by Habitat for Humanity of Tuolumne County at its Parrotts Ferry Village project – this month, construction on the project’s fifth and sixth homes are well underway. At the end of last year, the ATCAA Food Bank was struggling with refrigeration equipment it needed to provide fresh food to its clients – today, with those issues resolved, the food bank is delivering record amounts of fresh (and more healthy) food to local families. The Foundation was proud to support both these projects over the last year.

Our donors have also been active - 182 donor funds are presently held by the Foundation, with 73 of those providing scholarships to students from our area. Donor fund grants address a number of needs for local agencies, designated activities or fields of interest. In this newsletter, you will find a complete list of our donor funds and an opportunity for you to make a gift.

As for me, the past year has been educational, informative and incredibly rewarding. It is an honor for me to serve as Executive Director of the Sonora Area Foundation, and I look forward to continue being a part of the Foundation as we assist donors with charitable giving; make informed grants; and provide leadership on community issues.

If you have any questions about anything that you read in this newsletter, do not hesitate to contact me at 209-533-2596, by dropping me an e-mail at edwyllie@sonora-area.org, or by stopping by our office at 362 S. Stewart Street in Sonora.

Mission

The Sonora Area Foundation strengthens our community by assisting donors, making grants and providing leadership in a manner consistent with our values.
More seniors, fewer families and important shifts in jobs, income and health concerns show up as the key trends nonprofit leaders see in the third edition of the Tuolumne County Profile released this month.

The study, sponsored and coordinated by the Sonora Area Foundation, was released this fall, and includes a series of “indicators” that give a snapshot of how our community is doing in a variety of areas, including demographic, environmental, economic, social, and industry statistics.

The Foundation led a community effort to produce the first community profile in 2005 and helped produce subsequent editions in 2008 and now 2012. The goal has been to pull together a variety of local data and track it consistently in one report as a tool for community leaders trying to understand and stay on top of short-term and long-term trends.

Advocates from health, social service, education and senior agencies recently held a discussion with foundation leaders to identify their key “takeaways” from the most recent edition. Demographic shifts, they said, were the most pronounced.

“We are losing school age children in our community, the largest growth segment is people who are 85 and older... and we’re one of the three counties in the state where people 55 and older are more than 30 percent of the population,” says Mike Ruggles, director of Sierra Senior Providers. “That’s the locomotive that’s going to run us over if we’re not prepared.”

While the county’s aging demographic has been apparent for years, as has the decline in school-age children and adults under 45, the report gives a vivid picture of the impact on health, education, employment and social services.

Dramatic and on-going declines in school enrollment are a stark example.

“It’s a double whammy for schools,” says Danna Fritz, director of human resources for the Tuolumne County Superintendent of Schools. “We’re losing funding and we’re losing kids... And if you can’t keep your younger population in the community, that’s not healthy for the future.”

Tuolumne County Health Director Todd Stolp says it’s essential for agencies like his to be diligent about collecting accurate local information to understand and support this community’s unique needs.

“You can’t just grab information off the internet,” he said. “You have to have a local perspective.”

Shelly Hance, executive director of the A mador-Tuolumne Community A ction A gency, says she’s struck by how hard the community has been hit in the prolonged economic downturn. She pointed to the steady, year-after-year increase in the number of students receiving free or reduced meals, which finally hit 50 percent in the last two years.

Poverty data is notoriously slow to come in, she said, especially for small, rural counties like ours, but other indicators make it clear things aren’t getting better yet.

“What I really watch are the foreclosure rates and the school lunch enrollment,” she said. “We just see more and more need.”

Ruggles said his most serious concern is the increasing cost to provide rural services – and he sees the main strategy is to find ways to pool resources among agencies.

“That’s our viewpoint,” he says. “We have to be more collaborative in areas like senior transportation. We have to find ways to share and make the dollars we get go further. That’s our opportunity.”

Hance said local collaboration becomes even more important as government funding continues to erode.

“We’re all looking for creative ways to combine efforts,” she said. “Having this data and these conversations helps.”

A rts advocates realized a long-held dream this fall, when the Central Sierra Arts Council (CSAC) opened its new Kids Arts Studies Academy (KASA) at Sonora Union High School’s Dome Campus.

The new community arts program, KASA, is located in the former Sonora Parent Nursery School building at the Barretta Street campus, and already is hosting afterschool art classes for students and weekend art training programs for teachers. A grant from the Sonora A rea Foundation supports both the classes and the training program.

KASA is an exciting step forward for CSAC on several levels, said Executive Director Connie O’Connor-Gahagan. It stems from a growing partnership with local schools, who are both providing the building at a cost of just $1 per year and helping to develop the center’s programs. And it gives CSAC a home right next to one of Sonora’s most prominent and underused historic buildings, the Sonora Dome. The arts council has long dreamed of adapting the 1908 building into a center for arts and culture..

“KASA gives students of all ages a place to develop their artistic talents. And this exciting vision of ‘CSAC at The Dome’ is already underway,” O’Connor-Gahagan said.

“The timing couldn’t be better,” she added. “The demand for community-based arts classes for both youth and adults is high. This summer we had to turn away kids for our annual Summer Arts Camp. For the first time in eight years, registration for the camp was full a month in advance, and we had a waiting list of more than 30 students.”

Four more local families will be able to help build and purchase affordable new homes in the next six months, thanks to the continued success of Habitat for Humanity of Tuolumne County.

The local group completed four homes earlier this year at its Parrotts Ferry Village project in Columbia. Now two more are under construction and work begins on another two in six weeks. When complete, the Parrotts Ferry site eventually will include 35 homes.

“We’re actually on schedule and under budget,” said Executive Director Betsy Harden. “I’m giddy about it! I just keep being wowed by what this community gets done!”

The Sonora A rea Foundation has supported the local Habitat project with a grant for doors and windows for the project’s first few homes, as well as food for volunteer crews during this summer’s “blitz build,” which saw two homes completed in just six weeks.

Harden said the project’s momentum continued to build.

“One of the most exciting things that has happened is that we had two AmeriCorps members join us in September. They’re on the build site every day. That consistency and enthusiasm has made such a difference.”

More than 60 disadvantaged local children were able to start this school year with new clothes and school supplies, thanks to the annual efforts of dedicated community volunteers with the ChildSpree program.

Kiwanis Club of Sonora has been organizing the program for 18 years, pairing selected children with volunteer chaperones who help each child select back-to-school essentials. The project, originally started by the former Mervyn’s department store chain, has continued in Sonora thanks in large part to the efforts of Kiwanis member Tony Pallante.

When the Mervyn’s chain closed, Pallante and the Kiwanis pulled together with other service clubs, business contributors, the Sonora WalMart art store and the Sonora A rea Foundation to keep it going. The Foundation holds a fund to handle contributions, and Pallante and his team do all the rest. In the last 12 years, they have raised more than $100,000 and helped thousands of children get a strong start to the school year.

Pallante puts in many, many hours every year to line up donors, enlist chaperones for every child and coordinate with schools and social service agencies to recommend children in need. Next year, he will be passing leadership to fellow club member Mike Mandell.

“Tony deserves a lot of credit for all he’s done,” Mandell said. “This gives so many kids an even chance at the start of the school year. It’s such a need.”

Community project honors veterans’ stories

Personal stories of more than 35 local World War II veterans have carefully been recorded and preserved in a growing collection of published memoirs, thanks to the efforts of the Tuolumne County Veterans’ History Project.

A team of 18 trained volunteers is devoting many hours to interviewing World War II veterans – most of whom are in their late 80s and early 90s – and preserving their stories and pictures in paperback books. The project, managed by the newly formed non-profit Memoir Center with support from the staff at Friends and Neighbors magazine, so far has produced 26 books with another 10 in process. A Sonora Area Foundation grant is helping to cover the cost of producing and printing the booklets, so they can be provided at a low cost to the veterans’ families.

“We’ve captured some amazing stories,” said Friends and Neighbors editor and publisher Suzy Hopkins, who launched the project with memoirist Deanna Dechaine-Maurer two years ago. “Many of these veterans have never shared their experiences before, even with their families. In some cases it’s been very cathartic.

“Our interviewers have talked with all kinds of vets, from fighter pilots to merchant marines to women in the Coast Guard and Navy. There’s a sense of urgency to capture this firsthand history due to the veterans advancing ages. It’s good for them, for their families and for the community.”

Many of the stories can be viewed on the project’s website, www.memoircenter.org.

Born to Read program earns impact award

A library program designed to encourage a love of books and reading for very young children has earned the Sonora Area Foundation’s annual Elaine Symons Baker Community Impact Award.

Friends of the Tuolumne County Library won the annual honor – and a $10,000 award to the library’s Born to Read program. The program allows children ages 0 to 5 the chance to “earn” their own picture books when they visit the library, attend a weekly story hour or do other reading-related activities. The program provided more than 400 books over the last year and enlisted more than 180 new children.

“It’s a wonderful start,” said Friend of the Library President Louise Steuben, librarian at Sonora Elementary School. “Even the youngest children love stories, they love to listen and learn. The earlier you can get them interested in books, the easier it is for them to learn to read when they’re ready.”
